

Jurisdiction

Consider a world where your grandparents never met. What are the odds that this will mean that the names of the current Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasurer of the United States in that world will be different from your own?

I'll save you some time: the answer turns out to be 'low.' Which means that, if you visit that world, you don't exist - but you can still be paid. And once you go back to your world, you're untraceable.

This is quite a marketable condition to be in, is it not? As long as you are... appropriately clear-headed.
