

The Mathematician Sings of Love

'Zero' originally meant 'desert.' You have to trace it back all the way to Sanskrit, but there it is: in the universe of sacred geometry, the empty places of the world are collectively zero. Now think of the clear 'one' of that same geometry: it must be the Sun, right? And if the desert is the Zero, and the Sun is the One, then surely the starry night must be the twinkling binary code of the universe.

So come with me, my love. Let us watch the night sky calculate and iterate our destiny, for all the worlds to see...
