

A Cursed Field of Research

Some scholars research the nature of magic. Some look at the origins of realms and empires. A few try to divine, pardon the pun, how deities interact with the world and their worshippers. Me? I research interspecies cursing.

Not curses: cursing. My collegium accidentally ordered me to travel the world to find out what halflings call orcs, what orcs call dwarves, and what everybody calls elves. This requires many visits to rough places, meeting unsavory and often lascivious individuals, and buying endless rounds of harsh alcohol.

The collegium eventually tried to fix their mistake. Fortunately, I managed to prevent that.
