

Super Mega-Zoom Call Activate!

“The techies call it a ‘Mandela cascade,’ the general told me as we hurried down the hallway. “You know how large groups of people can remember historical events differently, and can’t figure out why? We assumed false memories... But it turns out the answer’s a lot simpler, Mr. President. We just weren’t all watching the same universe’s broadcasts. The effect came and went, so we didn’t really notice.”

She indicated a door; I held it open for her. Inside the room was a rack of monitors, each with a subtly different version of me looking back. “Until now,” she said.
