

Reorganization

Moving the capital to Terre Haute over the course of three months was a real pain in the ass.

But what could we do? When they proved the existence of leylines, anybody with a computer and a focusing stone could see that keeping the seat of government in DC would have been a disaster. A 'visibly getting worse' disaster, thanks to the Observer Effect.

We ended up digging up half the historic buildings and redistributing them, too. More leyline weirdness. Terre Haute got the Capitol Dome and the White House.

But not the Library of Congress. Specifically. I dunno why.
