

Wheelbarrows

They checked us for weapons. They checked us for weapons, powered technology, and even for hidden blueprints or schematics. Heck, they even found the reference samples of useful ores, and we had hidden those well. The Galactic observers were damn smug about that.

Which was the idea. You gotta get those patronizing bastards to think you really tried to evade the restrictions when entering a 'Tech-Regulated Primitive Warzone.' The ore samples would have been useful, but not as useful as knowing how to set up supply lines, or intelligence networks. Ideas can be hi-tech, too -- and just try interdicting those.
