

Mayswarms

I imagine most humans must be half-mad by now -- or at least horribly impatient at the slowness of the universe. They are just so quick, moving, talking, thinking, living, and dying ten times faster than we do. We can't cure them, either. This tragedy is rooted deep in their genes.

Although they at least do not see it as a tragedy. Given how humanity throws itself into its colonization efforts, they may even think it an advantage. We are lucky that the worlds best suited for them are useless to us.

What happens when those worlds are full, though?
