

All the Reason I Need

I was ready to go.

Jury-rigged gravity drive. Jury-rigged warp engine.

Fully-certified, factory-fresh singularity generator, because I'm no idiot. Everything else on this ship could be hit with a wrench until it started working again, but you just don't do that to artificial black holes.

But why did I build my own? I mean, it's possible to simply buy a starship. I could get something that could let me pop to the next star system, at least. And more reliably than this vessel could, even.

Sure, sure. But here's why I did it this way: because I felt like it.
