

Keeping Our Distance

Astronomy was a lot easier in the days of the Old Americans. They didn't have to go through hoops to observe planets and stars. No, they could just look at the damned things through a telescope.

Don't get me wrong, the dangers in looking at the Moon via telescopes are wildly overstated. You won't get possessed, you won't go catatonic, all of that is just bad historical fiction. But there's something in the Moon now. Something... eldritch.

It's not even awful! It's happy to stay up there, and never come down here.

But just staring at it still feels... unwise.
