

It's All In The Twist

Twisting probabilities can get pretty tedious. Lining everything up just right is sometimes an involved process. You have to be patient.

The funny bit is, humans always could twist probability. It's every other species that thinks it's a magical ability, because to them it's not innate. To us, it's just how the world works. It wasn't until we met other species that we realized that we can train up our luck to give us even more of an edge...

The lock clicked, and I grinned. The other species all think humans were born to be rogues. And, hey: they're right.
